Teaching Assistant Development Programme

Investing in opportunities for development for teaching assistants (TAs) is an important responsibility of all schools. Our Teaching Assistant Development Programme (TADP) provides TAs with a flexible and personalised CPD programme which can help you make the most of your TAs as well as giving them a greater say in their own development.

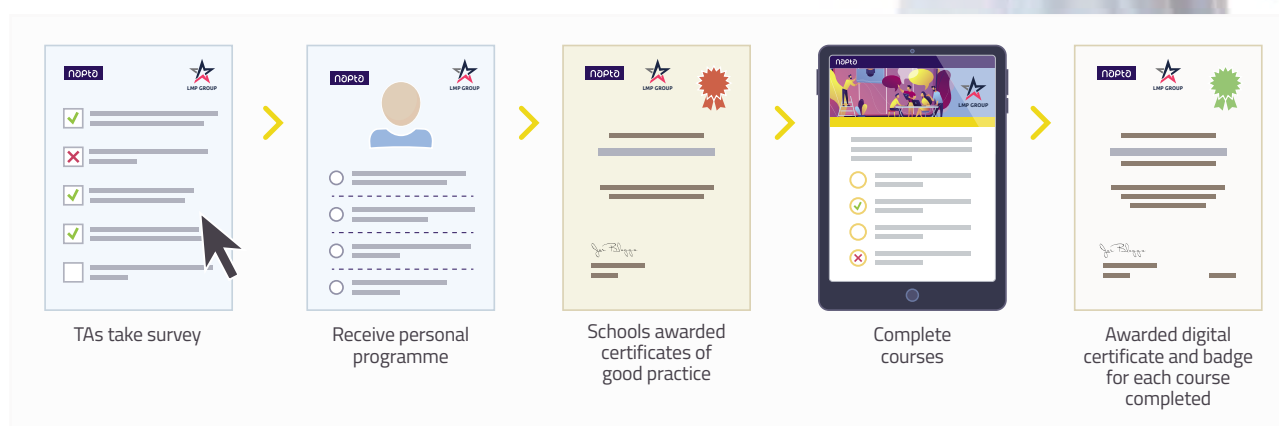

How it works

Each TA completes a simple online self-evaluation which analyses their professional development needs.

Give teaching TAs a greater say in their own development

Based on their responses, the system builds an individually tailored programme of courses from from the CPD Library, each course targeting an area the TA will improve upon. Every time a TA completes a course, they will be awarded a digital badge to show evidence of achievement.

TAs can access the courses online and offline on mobile phones and tablets, or via the web. Conveniently, the courses can be built into existing staff training provision.

Progress reports

The school receives a report summarising all the TAs' responses, helping leaders to make decisions about deployment. Those managing the TADP also receive reports for each TA detailing the courses they are working on and how they are progressing.

Why adopt the TADP

Confident, expert TAs make a real difference to educational outcomes and when well deployed, can help to control costs. The effective training and development of TAs can therefore be crucial. With the TADP, schools can:

- › save management time
- › offer highly personal and flexible professional development
- › improve recruitment, retention and deployment of TAs
- › promote feelings of confidence, ambition and empowerment
- › reduce costs
- › provide evidence of effective professional development
- › improve educational outcomes.

Improve recruitment,
retention and deployment

NAPTA has worked with over 5000 schools and 150 000 TAs. It is run by education specialists, including experienced teaching assistants.
